Civil service and the role of a commissioner

The Public Safety Civil Service ensures that employees are hired and retained based on their ability to do the work, and are insulated from political pressures. Civil service rights include the opportunity to compete for open positions, limited probationary periods, just cause and due process, and the ability to appeal certain employment actions.

Public Safety Civil Service Commissioners hold monthly meetings, hear employee appeals, and oversee other process that uphold merit-based employment. Commissioners are paid a stipend of $200/pay period, and typically spend 2 - 4 hours a month (infrequently, they meet longer to hear employee appeals).
